Ion MINCU, School of Architecture, 120 years old

The Romanian School of Architecture is 120 years old in 2012, and the Conference you are invited to represents the highlight of a series of events organized to mark the centenary of the School. The Romanian School of Architecture has since its very beginnings been a place of architectural education, research and of real architecture. Ion Mincu, the architect who the school is called after, was the founder of the Neo-romanian style, more internationally known as 'Art Nouveau'.

Many professors and students from the school have impressive national and international recognition. Leading world architects are honoured to be associated with the School by accepting the distinctions of Doctor Honoris Causa and Professor Honoris Causa. The anniversary's highlight event is a double conference with prestigious international guests. The conferences web sites are:
